Member's Profile: Jack Price

Jack was born in St Thomas' Hospital, London in May 1930. They were tough times being early in the Great Depression with WWII just around the corner. Jack had three siblings, two sisters and a brother. After the War, Jack did an Apprenticeship as an Electrician and then did his National Service in the RAF where he trained as an Air Radio Mechanic. During this time, Jack travelled extensively throughout Europe - some of the time by bicycle. While Jack had known Margaret for many years, it took a New Year's Eve party in the 1950's for love to blossom and they were married on 1st September 1956. They went on to have two daughters, Susan & Deborah over the next couple of years. Life was again tough in the UK and there was a housing shortage and Jack, Margaret and the children moved into a 22' caravan after living with family, so they made the decision to immigrate to Australia. Once they arrived, Jack applied for, and was granted his Electrician's Licence. After living initially in hostels, Jack & Margaret scraped up enough for the deposit for a block of land at Greenbank and lived in a caravan on the block while they saved to build a house. Their third daughter Ellen was born there. At age 40, Jack made another career change - this time to an Ambulance Officer, a career that he would see him through to retirement aged 60 in 1990 as Chief Training Officer. Jack then decided not to waste the knowledge that he had and commenced lecturing for QAS and St Johns in all levels of First Aid as well as writing the First Aid Training Manual for Queensland Police & Queensland Fire Service. Finally Jack went into full-time retirement in 1995. Apologies to Jack & Margaret for only using a smidgen of the information supplied.
